Impact Assessment and Responsible Development was the conference theme of IAIA11 that was held in Mexico between 29 May and 4 June 2011. Impact assessment (IA) plays a crucial role in responsible development, since it is a tool to assess comprehensively the changes in environment, communities, health and welfare. Infrastructure and industrial projects are practicing with such responsible development approach at the beginning of the conceptual stage and finalizing it at the end of the project.

About 600 delegates and experts from over 40 countries was gathered in Mexico and contributed positively their initiatives and ideas on how IA incorporates into their countries as a deciding factor for the development of industrial and infrastructure project.

We are pleased to have the members of HKIEIA who had presented in the IAIA11 conference, to share with us the topics they had presented at the conference. You are invited to join the debriefing session on the key ideas presented at the conference.
